An Increasingly Electronic Information Environment

This year, our transition to an increasingly electronic information environment accelerated quickly. In an age when faculty in most disciplines do the majority of their research outside the library and students live online using instant messaging, blogs, MySpace, and Facebook, libraries must offer their users digital library services.
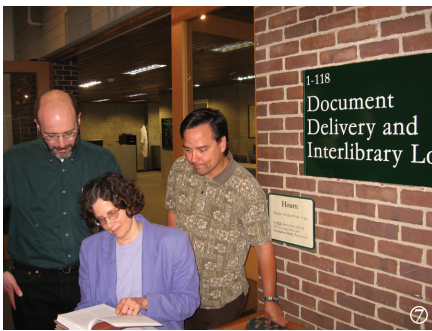

While the UConn Libraries (Storrs and the Regional Campuses) still buy about 27,000 books each year, the number of print journals we subscribe to has dropped from 9,000 to 3,000 during the last five years. The total number of journals offered, on the other hand, has risen and the UConn Libraries now offer access to more than 55,000 journals (with some inevitable duplication), primarily through publisher and aggregator packages of full-text electronic journals.

This year, we added access to new electronic resources as varied as: Oxford African-American Studies Center; Marquis Who's Who Online; Early British Periodicals; Encyclopedia Judaica; Medieval and Early Modern Sources Online; McGraw Hill's Access Medicine; Garland Encyclopedia of Music World Wide; and SnapShots (international market research data). We also purchased new software and adopted open source software that will enhance our offerings of text and image-based local digital collections.

Our users' response to electronic journals, electronic reference books, databases, and digital collections has been remarkable. General tools like Academic Search Premier and Academic Universe get searched about 350,000 times during the year, primarily by students. More specialized electronic resources, such as Web of Science (129,000 searches) and Science Direct (107,000 sessions) are heavily used by our researchers and educators.

Increasingly, we are licensing networked resources, including electronic journals, databases, and electronic reference books, that can be shared (simultaneously if necessary) at all nine of our physical locations and used by authorized UConn faculty, staff, and students from anywhere they have internet access.

Teaching UConn students and faculty how to optimize the University's growing investment in electronic resources has emerged in a short period of time into an important library enterprise. This academic year, library staff members taught approximately 1,300 instruction sessions to roughly 13,000 participants.

Interlibrary loan staff members borrow about 30,000 items a year for UConn faculty and students when they can't find what they need in our libraries or online. Increasingly, these transactions, too, are automated and both returnable books and non-returnable copies of journal articles are currently obtained for the UConn community much more rapidly. This year the Libraries procured software that will extend our users' ability to seamlessly request most of their desired materials from other libraries without intervention or review by the UConn Libraries' interlibrary loan staff.

Each year, as digital library services become more prevalent, library staff members strive to make the most relevant and heavily used information resources available and accessible to our users as effectively and efficiently as we can. This year, we made significant progress. UConn's Class of 2007 and their instructors had rapid and convenient access to a wider array of information resources than any previous Husky class. We hope the best is yet to come!

1. Dale Flecker, associate director of planning and systems at Harvard University Library, discussed his institution's participation in Google's Book Project at a forum on digitization sponsored by the University Libraries on April 3 in Konover Auditorium.

2. Noted ornithologist and artist David Sibley, whose paintings were exhibited at the Libraries, spoke to a standing room only audience in Konover auditorium April 12 as part of the Edwin Way Teale Lecture Series.

3. Richard Bleiler was among the librarians who taught about 1,300 instruction sessions to some 13,000 students this past year.

5. Joseph Scheer, an artist and professor of print media and co-director of the Institute for Electronic Arts at Alfred University, whose scanned and digitized oversized prints of moths were exhibited at Babbidge Library, spoke about his art on March 25 at the Dodd Center.

6. UConn alumnus Peter Good '65 (left) and his son Jesse Good (center) prepare to install their Husky sculpture "Transformation" in Bookworms Café as Vice Provost for University Libraries Brinley Franklin watches.

7. Joe Natale, Robin Lubatkin, and Steve Bustamante of the Document Delivery/Interlibrary Loan office, which borrows some 30,000 items a year, check a book for a user.
