Introduction

The University of Connecticut Libraries forged new directions in support of the University's programs this year. The Libraries also completed a significant number of initiatives in conjunction with the University's new Academic Plan. The role of 21st century academic research libraries evolves each year; in 2009-2010, the UConn Libraries enhanced its undergraduate learning spaces at all six campuses and loaned undergraduate students mobile computing devices, e-book readers, and other technologies to support them in the learning process.

The Libraries also improved the discoverability of publications world-wide for the University's faculty and students by implementing WorldCat Local, which enables users to simultaneously search UConn holdings, the other 18 regional Boston Library Consortium libraries, and the 10,000 participating WorldCat libraries. The initiative resulted in a corresponding increase in interlibrary loan activity. More of the University's unique collections were digitized and made available to scholars around the globe, including print collections, geospatial data, and streaming video interviews with prominent authors. The Libraries also supported the University's public engagement, diversity, and internationalization initiatives through numerous public programs and exhibits. Some key activities and accomplishments this year included:

Learning Commons Assessment 360
The Undergraduate Education Team conducted a broad study of how undergraduates use spaces and technologies to work. The assessments included focus groups, an online technology survey across all six campuses, filmed interviews, and work-space monologues. Presentations on this initiative were/will be made at the NERCOMP Annual Meeting and at the NELIG Annual Meeting in June.

Embedded Information Literacy
New Freshman English instructors were given one-on-one mentoring and provided with a librarian-delivered instruction session; experienced instructors also received mentoring, but deliver information literacy instruction sessions themselves. Early indications show that instructors who take ownership of information literacy devote more time to this aspect of critical thinking than those who rely upon librarian delivered instruction.

Research Consultations
Encouraging liaison librarians to engage in more outreach to faculty and graduate students resulted in an increase of 25 percent in the number of research consultations, from 2,233 to 2,794.

Public Engagement Activities
Library Research Services and Undergraduate Education staff members provided workshops for Early College Experience faculty, students, and school media specialists.

1) The library study examined the way in which undergraduates use space and technology to work.

2) A librarian helps a student in a Nursing class that she co-taught.

3) Liaison librarians increased their outreach to faculty.

4) Therapy dogs visited the library during finals to help students "paws and relax."

5) The Learning Commons enhancements made this year were welcomed by students.

6) One of the 19th century Spanish women's magazines that was digitized.

7) Kindles were among the electronic devices that were available for loan.

8) A talk by noted author, the late Frank McCourt, delivered for the Litchfield County Writers' Project, was digitized and offered by the Libraries for the first time via streaming video.

Digital Projects

For the third consecutive year, the UConn Libraries contributed 500,000 pages of digitized material to the Open Content Alliance. The Libraries also digitized a collection of 19th century Spanish magazines.

Technology Innovations

Technology innovations bring a new level of power and portability to library users and will certainly play a significant role in the future of information generation, dissemination, retrieval and sharing. This year we expanded our laptop lending program and added digital video recorders, digital cameras, digital voice recorders, Kindles, and iPads.

Group Studies Enhancements

Two new group studies were added in Babbidge Library, five research carrels and six group studies were made available for six hour charge out, and 19 white boards were added.

Learning Commons Upgrades

* The Learning Commons in the Homer Babbdige Library added new chairs, collaborative tables, microform scanners, a color book scanner, and a Student Affairs' Husky Rech desk in academic year 2009/2010. New power outlets are being added over the summer.

* At the Regional Campus Libraries, one-time monies enabled all five libraries to enhance their Learning Commons spaces. A major renovation was undertaken at the Avery Point Campus, and, for the second conseecutive year, improve ments were made at the Trecker Library on the Greater Hartford Campus.

* LibraryH3LP, a library-specific Instant Message platform began in May 2010. LibraryH3LP is a popular application, used internationally at approximately 300-400 universities.

Document Delivery/Interlibrary Loan

New user friendly DD/ILL management software (OCLC's ILLIAD) was introduced this year and the Libraries also implemented OCLC's resource sharing platform, the WorldCat Navigator Request Engine in conjunction with the Boston Library Consortium. Procurement of books and articles for UConn users for fiscal year 2010 was up from 40,675 to 56,855, or 39 percent over last year.

Video Streaming Enhancements

More than 50 classes used streaming media this year. Users now have access to over 1,100 titles. This now includes films we've licensed and streamed on our server, as well as audio and video content from Naxos, Alexander Street Press, and Swank. Interviews with writers participating in the Litchfield County Writers' Project were made available via the web as well.

MAGIC Innovation, Digitzation, Collaboration

* The new Map and Geographic Information Center (MAGIC) website enables users to browse geospatial data, search for specific locations in Connecticut, and create and print their own maps. All scanned historical maps are now also available on Flickr.

* The Connecticut State Data Center (CtSDC) and the Libraries Map and Geographic Information Center (MAGIC) formed a new partnership to facilitate the integration of CtSDC's Census and other demographic data and MAGIC's geo-referenced map and Geospatial data resources.

* MAGIC was co-recipient with Trinity College of a Digital Humanities startup grant ($100,800) from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) to begin digitizing resources related to Hartford, Connecticut and Civil Rights history.

* UConn undergraduate students are receiving course credit for their work in MAGIC In a new collaboration with the Department of Geography.

Diversity-related Programs and Exhibits

The Diversity Team sponsored 11 public programs or series, six of which were diversity or human rights related, including a Human Rights Film Series that spanned 8 months of the academic year. The Team also mounted five exhibits in Babbidge Library and the Dodd Center related to diversity.

Institutional Repository Growth

The DigitalCommons@UConn, our institutional repository, grew from 4,800 documents to 5,358, or 12% this year. In addition to faculty contributions, digital versions of Board of Trustees' minutes from 1976-2002 and UConn undergraduate and graduate catalogs from 2001 to the present reside in the repository. In addition, the number of oral histories from Connecticut leaders available locally to researchers increased from 864 to 938, a 9% increase.

Diversity and Public Engagement Activities at the Regional Campus Libraries

* All of the regional campus libraries (RCLs) provided workshops and instruction to Early College Experience teachers.

* At Stamford, databases corresponding to a monthly theme were highlighted such as the Spotlight on Women & Social Movements database (for Women History Month), and the Spotlight on Oxford African American Studies Center database (for Black History Month). The Jeremy Richard Library also partnered with a faculty member to showcase its wide variety of films from India and with local libraries to host the Stamford Public Library's Film Series - World of Films.

* The Waterbury Library hosted the "Holodomor Famine and Fiction" exhibit (as did Stamford), worked with a faculty member at Naugatuck Valley Community College to create an exhibit on African Americans and comics, and hosted a series of six workshops for the Osher Institute for Lifelong Learning.

9) Lee Rainie, director of the Pew Internet & American Life Project, was the featured speaker at the Libraries' spring public forum.

10) Naugatuck Valley Community College professor William H. Foster III spoke about his collection of African Americans in comics on exhibit at the Waterbury campus library.

11) Library staff member Lana Babij with an exhibit about the famine that ravaged Ukraine in 1932-33.
